February 10, 2004 LB 139A

the summer and in the fall. And again, I'm relating this to this bill simply because of the use of General Fund monies in this bill, and because I wanted to relate to you what's going on, and I want to make a special effort, I guess, to ask you to look at this material when it comes available to you, which it will later today. In any rate, Steve spent an enormous amount of time on this in the summer and the fall. And it is very difficult to dig out the kinds of information that I was asking him to dig out to compare our program to other programs. But he did a great job of that. And he came up with certain kinds of comparisons. It is a work product that is still in progress, in terms of there is further and extended work that needs to be done in other areas and with other comparisons. But he has, in fact, made some telling comparisons. And I want to indicate to you in a kind of general sort of way one or two of the big things that he discovered, and which will be the subject of some conversation, I'm sure, among this Legislature as time passes here this session. But the first thing he sought to do, and he sought to do this with respect to all 50 states, he went to...into all 50 states, talking to people and looking into their statutes, and tried to identify the large-scale, broad-based incentive programs. Now, as you and I know, there are all different types of incentive programs out there, so he didn't try to take what local government is doing, and he didn't try to take everything that state government does. In fact, in this chart that...in this comparison that I want to discuss with you, all that he took were Nebraska's LB 775 incentives, and what we've been paying out. That's what he used for our comparison. And beyond that, he didn't even use all of the LB 775 comparisons. He used those incentives that were in LB 775, except the personal property tax incentives, and that was too difficult to calculate in a fair manner and compare to other states, so he left that out, following the directive that I had given him to be conservative in all of his work and in all of his calculations. So he compared those aspects of LB 775 for Nebraska, and then tried to identify in all 50 of the other states, where they allow you to accumulate information, that basic, broad-based program that is comparable in other states. And at this point in time, he's been able to get information on 14 different states, including the surrounding states of Iowa and Colorado and Kansas. And when Steve asked around the
